

GUIDES TO HELP YOU

We have a variety of guides and forms available on our website and in our reference room, including:

- Reference guides by subject
- Printed indexes and finding aids
- Order and permission forms

VISIT US

In our reference room, you can:

- Get expert help from archivists and access technicians
- Research your BC family history
- Access government, business and private records
- View films and photographs
- Access archival court records
- Read copies of BC community newspapers on microfilm
- Research land and settlement records
- Read books and publications from the archival library
- Listen to interviews and broadcasts
- View paintings, drawings and prints by appointment
- Examine maps, plans or architectural drawings

CAN'T VISIT IN PERSON?

From our website, you can:

- Order copies of records or microfilm
- Order copies of divorce documents and court records
- Send us a simple research question
- Locate an independent researcher who will conduct detailed research for a fee
- Contact our permissions officer if you would like to use archival records (images, text, film or audio) in your project. Restrictions or fees may apply.

WE'RE OPEN LATE

We know not everyone can visit during our regular staffed hours—that's why the reference room is open late on weekdays and during the day on weekends. There are no staff on site during these times, so no original records can be retrieved, but we're happy to set items aside for you in a locker.

A limited number of lockers are available; please contact us in advance to reserve one. Some archival materials, including original photographs, maps, rare books and fragile records, are not available after hours. You must hold a valid research pass to request items.

BC ARCHIVES

ABOUT US

The BC Archives acquires, preserves and makes publicly accessible the documentary heritage of the province. We provide researchers access to our collections of historical photographs, documents, sound recordings, film, maps and publications.

We hold millions of archival treasures that reveal BC's past. Our collection includes records of government as well as records of individuals, businesses and families whose experiences and legacies shaped BC and whose stories help us understand where we are today and allow us to look ahead to tomorrow. Whether you're a seasoned genealogist or a student researching your first project, we have the resources and staff to point you in the right direction.

"The British Columbia Archives is a treasure house of information, an inspiration for students, writers, historians, novelists; it is a possession of which we have every reason to be proud."

John Hosie, Provincial Archivist
The Daily Colonist, February 1, 1928

PLAN YOUR VISIT

The British Columbia Archives is located in Victoria, British Columbia, Canada, beside the Royal BC Museum.

To make the best use of your time at the BC Archives, advance planning is recommended because of the size and complexity of our collections held both on and off site. Here are a few tips:

- Take a look at our website. You'll find answers to many questions, and you can search thousands of records and publications using our online catalogues. If you can't find what you're looking for, contact us.
- Apply for your research pass online. We provide all visitors to the archives with a research pass for access. Remember to bring photo ID with you when you visit us for the first time.
- Email us in advance of your visit. The records you want to see might be stored off site. If we have a few days' notice, we can make sure they are ready and waiting for you.
- Some of our records have access restrictions or are in specialized storage. Please contact us in advance about restricted records. You may need to contact our Privacy section for access.
- Occasionally records are unavailable because they are undergoing conservation treatment or are on exhibit.
